FRIDAY, OCT. 8, 1875.

NEWS OF THE MORNING.

President Grant is making the tour of Colorado.

President Grant's speech at Des Moines, Iowa, has produced an acrimonious feeling between Protestants and Catholics.

A man named Robert Miller was killed yesterday morning near Paxton, Illinois, by Willis Conn, and the murderer surrendered himself.

We have an additional report of the lighting at Friar's Point in our morning dispatches.

John Garham, of the Gorman manufacturing company, has failed for $600,000. It does not affect the corn any.

The specie in the Bank of France has decreased 15,758,000 francs during the past week.

The San Jose races yesterday were of an exciting character, attracting many visitors from all over the State.

Prof. Thomas Ryder, of Nottingham, England, died suddenly in Hartford yesterday.

The Leland family have left New York for the Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

Major Bryant, of San Francisco, is enjoying the freedom of New York.

POOR BOUTH. Every little country newspaper is threatening to have Congress take his ranch away from him now. One of the great guns of San Francisco sagely remarks that a saving clause in favor of the charitable grants made by the unfortunate man should be inserted.

Santa Barbara is a pretty little village down by the sea and the visitor to that cool retreat would hardly suppose men's evil passions were ever permitted to sway them there. But the place is human after all. Not long ago a party of individuals made a wholesale attack on Johnson of the Press for which he should indulge in a little free use of a shot gun. Later another gentleman was assaulted and last week the local editor of the Press was made the subject of attack. In the last instance the attacking party came out second best with a broken leg. Santa Barbara editors owe to themselves not to get thrashed when the fight is anything like even handed and where it is not they should call in the services of one of Colt's equalizers.

If VOLTAIRE had been called upon to indite a satire on religion in the most concise form and affective manner he could not have surpassed the designers of the American double eagle now turned out by the United States Mint. "In God we Trust" greets the eye as we gaze upon one of these splendid coins. We presume it is an adaptation of CROMWELL'S maxim "Trust in God but keep the powder dry," to the peaceful walks of life, counseling an implicit reliance upon Providence when the wallet is well lined with specie. We don't exactly see the necessity of mottoes on the coin of the realm, but if there must be one this is perhaps as good as any.

The Temecula Indians.

The ejection of the TEMECULA Indians from the lands they have occupied for many years looks very much like a perversion of the law. It seems these natives have resided upon the land for a sufficient time to acquire a title by prescription, as they cultivated the soil, and otherwise asserted ownership. The writ of ejection was applied for by the claimants and seems to have been speedily issued and immediately executed. There was no trial of the case whatever, so far as reported, and the Indians were not represented by any counsel. Their request for time to consult their chief OLEGARIO was treated with contempt and they were forthwith driven out.

That Tanyard.

We yesterday met a resident of Aliso street, below the railroad, struggling along under the weight of a huge demijohn, and artlessly asked whether it was a christening or a "bach" party the "ammunition" was for. "No," he replied "it is a couple of gallons of Cologne water I intend to sprinkle around my room at night to drown the odor of that infernal tanyard." Then, a ghastly smile flitting over his countenance, he whispered in our ear. "It is my firm belief that those fellows are digging up corpses out of the graveyard and taking the hides off them, for there is no other way they could get up such an unholly smell as the breeze wafts nightly to my domicile." He walked away looking sad and murmuring, "The concentrated essence of enough Limberger Cheese to freight a thousand ships cannot equal it."

Guard Against Fire.

Saturday will be the anniversary of the great Chicago conflagration. The mention of the great calamity naturally reminds one of danger in his own neighborhood. We instinctively turn to Los Angeles and inquire whether there is a possibility of extensive destruction by the fire fiend. Our city is built mainly of wood. The mildness of the climate dispenses with the necessity of heavy structures, and renders the light frame building preferable to one of stone or brick. The use of combustible material of course enhances the danger of rapidly in case of a great fire. It therefore behooves the city authorities not to overlook the proper regulations relating to buildings, tending to guard against the spreading of fire. Los Angeles is no longer a village. She unquestionably ranks as a city and as such requires stringent ordinances for the protection of property. No one should be allowed within the municipal limits to construct an edifice that endangers his neighbors' property, and the stowing of highly inflammable or explosive substances in thickly settled localities should be prohibited. In all cities it has been found necessary to legislate upon these points. Let our authorities not delay until a great catastrophe forces the recognition of the danger.

Will California be Surpassed.

There seems to be an inextinguishable apathy among our people in relation to the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition, an apathy that is wholly inexcusable when the importance of the opportunity for exhibiting the resources of our favored state are considered. This exposition will be the grandest ever known in this country, and equal the proudest in the annals of the Old World. Forty millions of enterprising Americans will make such a show as all Europe cannot surpass. Every city, village and hamlet in this great country will have its representatives there, and from all parts of the civilized world will come genius, talent and wealth to witness the grand spectacle. The press in every land will team with accounts of the display.

Not a single member of the Union can equal California in the display of the products of the earth and the mine and certainly none can approach her in natural curiosities and wonderful specimens. This Coast can array a collection that will be the cynosure of all eyes. Her fruits and flowers, grains and roots, her minerals, her live stock, and her manufactured products embrace almost all that man seeks in every quarter of the globe. The intelligent visitor to the Exposition who simply glances over the catalogue will give the preeminence to this favored land. Who can estimate the vast benefits to flow from a proper representation of our resources at the great exhibition of American enterprise and American wealth? A well managed collection from the single county of Los Angeles would be worth millions to the State. Let our people then be up and doing. Let California not be surpassed by any part of this country at the national jubilee, and let Southern California particularly show to the world what her climate and soil are capable of producing. Our Board of Supervisors have been remiss in their duties on this score, it is appropriate in this place to give them a gentle reminder. The State Board of Commissioners requested the appointment of a sub-committee of five by the Supervisors of each county to assist in the work of selecting and forwarding collections. No appointments have yet been made in Los Angeles, and much valuable time is being lost. Gov. DOWNEY, the member of the State Board from this district, is doing all in his power to further the work, and should be manfully supported.

The Potato Blight.

Troubles never come singly. Sonoma county has been scourged by the phyloxera, her vineyards being threatened with entire destruction, and now the potato blight has made its appearance there. It is also reported in Humboldt county. It is folly for the people of Los Angeles to flatter themselves that they will not be visited at some time by these enemies, and it therefore behooves them to be watchful. The cultivation of the Irish potatoes has suddenly grown to large proportions in this section, and anything which threatens this important industry must be regarded with serious alarm. Southern California is better adapted to the growth of the potato than any other part of the United States. The yield per acre is from ten to eighteen tons, which makes this at the lowest price likely to be reached a most valuable crop. In very few parts of the world can the labor of one man produce a stable crop valued at five to seven thousand dollars, yet this is not uncommon among the potato growers of Los Angeles. The potato disease first made its appearance in Germany in 1842, spreading to England in 1845, and becoming so widespread in Ireland in 1846 and '7 as to cause the great famine in that country. It has existed for many years in the Western States. The origin and character of this disease and an effectual remedy have attracted the attention of the scientific men of all civilized countries, and many volumes have been written upon it. The better opinion seems to be that it originates from loss of vitality in the seed caused by continued replanting of the same stock, and is no doubt partly caused by too long cultivation upon the same land. It must be borne in mind that the tuber or root of the potato is not its proper seed, but an appendage of the plant, and constant replanting of cuttings of the potato is therefore continued subdivision of vitality, and a point is ultimately reached when it has not sufficient substance to reproduce itself, and thus falls a prey to disease. The blight first attacks the leaves; and if configurations. Then we are some times subject to stiff gales, not so violent as those which sweep over the Lake City, it is true, but sufficiently strong to cause the flames to spread rapidly reaches the tuber. In Humboldt for example, the vines flourished till near maturity, when they suddenly wilted and died. Our potato growers therefore should be very careful in the selection of their seed, particularly avoiding those from the infected district, and giving the preference to potatoes from either the States or from Mexico and Peru. They should never plant from the growth of their own land. Mexico and Peru being the home of this plant, it would be the better policy to make arrangements to secure seed from those countries. A continued replanting of the same land in potatoes should be scrupulously avoided. That these precautions will prove effectual is shown by the history of Ireland. After the famine new varieties of potatoes were introduced, and the stock is replaced from time to time by importation of fresh seed, while due care is taken to properly rotate crops. While they have not been wholly free from the disease its ravages have been restricted.

Expressly for the "Express."

EDITOR HERALD: I have noticed considerable nonsense in the Express lately with reference to the fig tree in Los Angeles, it being claimed that this tree bears at the age of six or twelve months. Now I am favorable to a legitimate statement of the advantages of this section, but such ridiculous assertions are calculated to throw discredit upon all the claims put forward by the press of our country. Every fruit grower knows that where cuttings are put out on which are fully or partially developed fruit germs these will mature the following Spring, just as they would had the bough remained on the parent tree. The fruit grower is also well aware that to allow these original germs to develop into fruit greatly weakens the young plant and delays its production of legitimate fruit, and he therefore destroys the germ or plucks the young fruit as soon as discovered. The fig does not bear for several years any crop worth speaking of, and it is folly to persuade people to plant otherwise. The public expect at least common sense of an editor, if nothing more.

Yours, figuratively,

THE FLIRT.

'Tis said God caused all things to be,
Both on the earth and in thesea,
And man he made of common dirt,
Of things more base he made the flirt.
Boil down demons in a kettle,
Mash and grind them with a pestle,
From out the pulp extract the bad
And the essence of a flirt is had.
Decent and beauty freely blended,
A modesty that's but pretended,
Conceit and availing complete a flirt,
Our charming, dashing flirt can fill.
They care for no man's woe or woe,
They like to see men suffer though,
Their pleasure is their only thought,
Their happiness alone is sought,
Pandora's evils haunts still,
Alas! I fear they always will,
Yet they are blessed rich and rare,
Compared with maidens false and fair—
Who lead men on with winking smiles,
Surround their hearts by practiced wiles,
Teach them to love, then crush the passion,
In a heartless, cold and cruel fashion.

Up the Pole.

Some miscreant exercised his spirit of vandalism lately by cutting the rope attached to the high flag staff of the United States hotel. Mr. Mesmer, the owner of the United States, was not satisfied with this arrangement, and, at first, proposed to climb the pole himself and rig the rope, having on a previous occasion reached a point midway with telegraph climber, but at last decided to pay twenty dollars to the successful climber of the pole. Last evening in the presence of an immense crowd the attempt was made. Sam Edwards dressed in a linen suit with a white starched shirt, and no rosin on his hands, reached within eight feet of the top, and then from exhaustion had to descend. Mr. George Dalls, a professional acrobat, made the next attempt and successfully placed the rope through the block, one hundred and five feet from the ground and hung the hotel flag to the breeze. He descended amid the applause of a thousand spectators, received his money and Mesmer invited the crowd in to drink. Mr. Dalls says that he will bet that his wife will climb half way to the top, and Mr. Mesmer gallantly offered fifty dollars if she succeeds in scaling the United States hotel pole. Taken altogether, this climbing up a pole, one hundred and five feet high without mechanical aids is wonderful and the two gentlemen who made the attempt deserve great praise for the nerve. Mr. Edwards, who so nearly succeeded, deserves equal praise with Mr. Dalls, and if he had worn woolen clothes would undoubtedly have succeeded.

Gone to California.

"Where's the Colonel Jowness?" asked the butcher of Mrs. Smith, as she opened the door in answer to noises like a man who had been walking on his hands in front of a dash board. "He's gone to California, I guess," was the answer.

"There!" said the butcher, "goes another ten dollars' worth of meat to the land of oranges and lemons; I wonder who they'll skin when they all get together out there! When did he go?"

"I reckon they went about half past one, last night—leastways my husband heard a noise in there about that time," she replied.

"Dang me, if I don't prosecute the hull state of California if another one goes there without paying up!" said the butcher as he went off muttering and shaking his fist.—Kansas.

Will Remain Until Further Notice.

We are informed that the new steamer for the Colorado Steam Navigation Company, now building at the mouth of the river, is expected to be launched about October 14th.
